Japan Aiming At Friendlier U.S. Relations

By Takashi Oka

TOKYO, July 5 (NYT).— Premier Essaku Sato named today a strong new cabinet that is expected to give major attention to Japan's fraying economic rela-tions with the United States.

As twin pillars of a policy emphasizing active partnership with the United States, Mr. Sato chose two powerful rivals for the succession to the premiership, Takeo Fukuda and Kakuel Tanake. Mr. Puluda, 56, is the new foreign minister, while Mr. Temaka, 55, is the minister of international trade and industry. A third Bentement, former chief cabinet secretary Shigeru Hori, is taking charge of party matters as secretary-general of the ruling liberal-Democratic party.

For the last mouth there has been something close to a crisis atmosphere in Japanese attitudes toward the United States. Every essman, government official and politician returning from visits to Washington and New York has brought word that American criticism and irritation over rising Japanese exports has reached a dangerously emotional

Exports to the United States have been booming at a time when American unemployment stands at 6.2 percent of the work force Japan's trade sur-plus with the United States this year is expected to be double the $1 billion level reached last year. Tired of Promises Jananese returning from the United States have reported that Americans are tired of repeated Japanese promises to undertake "orderly marketing" or to liber-aliza Japan's own highly pro-ictionist trade and capital import policies. Speedy action is vital, these Japanese say, if American irritation and frustration are to be kept from turning into outright hospility reminiscent of pre-Pearl Harbor days.

Szto's new cabinet gives evidence that the premier has taken account of these feelings and has chosen individuals with sufficient political strength of their own to enforce difficult decisions. At the first meeting of the new Cabinet today, Sato requested his ministers to "tackle difficult internal and external problems with courage, and to work to improve friendly relations with the Unifed States."

"Any least fissure between Japan and the United States must be avoided at any cost," Mr. Founds said at his first news conterence after the cabinet meeting. Mr. Tanaka, meanwhile, expressed the bope that, as veteran ministers, he, "the foreign and finance ministers would all cooperate in tackling Japanese-American problems.

Kiesinger to Quit as Party Chief

Barzel, Schroeder Lead Bonn Candidates

By Lawrence Fellows

BONN, July 5 (NYT).-Kurt Georg Kiesinger, the former West German Chancellor, declared today that he was stepping down as chairman of the Christian Democratic Union.

Although Mr. Kiesinger did not say it when he informed the party presidium of his decision this morning, there was a suggesilon that he had also dropped out of the running for the chancellorship in the 1973 elections. The presidium did not ask him, nor did it discuss the matter afterward. Mr. Kiesinger did not put forward the name of anyone he thought should succeed

There are several hats in the ring, and considerable lobbying among party leaders and some concern about how to clear away the confusion before the party conference due to be held in Saarhruecken in October, when a new party chairman is to he

A leading candidate is Rainer Barzel. At 47, he is 20 years younger than the former chancellor. Mr. Barzel had been party whip for the Christian Democrats and seems to enjoy the confidence and admiration of a majority of the party's members in the Bundestag. Jobs May Be Split Until now the party's chairman has always been its candidate for chancellor. There are several moves afoot to separate the johs. some of them by contestants who hope thereby to pool their sup-port for each other's benefit. Another candidate who has heen enjoying a surge of popularity in the public opinion polls is Gerhard Schroeder, the 60-yearold former foreign minister in Chancellor Konrad Adenaner's preter with a Soviet team of pentathion athletes last month. Mr. Schroeder had been Ade-nauer's candidate to succeed him.

but lost the old chancellor's favor when he refused to continue to support him for the Even Mr. Kiesinger is said not to be convinced that he is really out of the running for the chancellorship. He once called the election in 1969 that cost him the other "grand coalition," as he had for the three years before. The parties in it were his own Christian Democratio Union, its Bavarian sister party, the Christian Social Union, led by Franz Josef Strauss, and the Social Democratic party led by Willy Brandl.

The two Christian unions form a single voting bloc in the Bun-1969 elections, but without a majority. Mr. Brandt formed a new coalition with the Free Democratic party of Walter Scheel, the only other party to win a place in the Bundestag.

Mr. Schroeder has cautiously avolded criticism of Chancellor Brandt's policy of rapprochement with the East, in the hope of leaving intact the possibility of forging another grand coalition.

He has also seemed to favor the election of Helmut Kohl, 41, the big, energetic minister-president of Rhineland-Palatinate, as chairman of the party. Gerhard Stoltenberg, 42, the rather hland but increasingly popular minister-president of Schleswig-Holstein, is apparently a candidate for the party chairmanship, and he seems to favor Mr. Barzel as the party's candidate for the chancellorship.

President Georges Pompidou and West German Chancellor Willy Brandt agreed today that an enlarged European Economic Community must not erect new tariff barriers against the United States. West German government spokesman Kourad Ahlers told a news conference that accord on this point emerged in the first of two days of talks between the two leaders. The talks took place during a five-hour cruise on a

2 High-Ranking Greek Reds Get Prison Sentences

ATHENS, July 5 (UPI),-Two high-ranking members of the Greek Communist party were given stiff sentences by a civil court tonight for violation of a special anti-sedition law,

Efstratios Tsambis, 48, of Ikaria Island, a seaman, was sentenced to ten years' imprisonment with four years' loss of civil rights for violation of Anti-Sedition Law 509 and for forgery, while Constantinos Litsas, 55, an electrician, of Amarousion, near Athens, was given five years' jail for violation of Law 509

The two men, tried by a fivemember appeal court, were the first opponents of the regime to be tried by a civil court for violation of Law 509—passed in 1947 when Greece was fighting against an armed Communist rebellion since it was transferred to the jurisdiction of civil courts in

Mr. Tsambis, who admitted being a member of the central committee of the Greek Communist party, entered Greece illegally after the military takeover of 1967 to reorganize the Communist underground. Mr. Litsas also came back to Greece from behind the Iron Curtain, to take over the leadership of the Communist party's organization in Athens.

Russian Envoy Will Visit New Malta Regime

VALLETTA, Malta, July 5 (UPI) —Soviet Ambassador Mikhail Smirkovsky will come to Malta tomorrow for high-level talks with the island nation's new Labor party government, Mal-tese officials said today.

Mr. Smirkovsky, ambassador to Britain and non-resident envoy to Malta, is arriving in the waka of Premier Dom Mintoff's election victory and subsequent disagreements with Britain over the status of military accords between the two.

Officials declined to disclose the exact purpose of the Russian's visit but said he would call on the Ministries of Justice, Trade. Industry and Tourism. Mr. Smirkovsky came to Malta from London last year for unsuccessful attempts to persuade the Nationalist administration of Premier Georgi Borg-Olivier to permit establishment of a Soviet embassy on Maltese territory.

SINGAPORE July 5 (NYT) - assist them," the Vice-President Vice-President Spiro T. Agnew renewed his criticism of the national news media today, charging them with unintentionally assisting the North Vietnamese by some aspects of their coverage of the war in Indochina.

The Vice-President, on a tennation goodwill tour, also suggested that the media had been arrogant in publishing "top-secret" government documents and inadequate in presenting to both American and foreign audiences the true aims of American foreign policy.

Mr. Agnew's unusually sharp words, delivered in his customary low-key fashion, came during a conversation here with a group of newsmen he invited to his suite to explain the purpose of his worldwide trip.

Apparently responding to newspaper and magazine articles that questioned the diplomatic valua. of his three-week mission, he described his voyage as more than a routine goodwill trip. He said it was partly an effort to reassure friendly nations, particularly in Asia and around the Mediterranean, that the United States intends to remain a world power despite soma "isolationist" voices in Washington.

Salgon Chances Good' Turning to Vietnam, the Vice-President said he believed that the prospects for the survival of tba South Vietnamese govern-ment were "very good," but ha said that one major variable was the patience of the American people. This patience, he said, might and the law itself have produced a bumper crop of legal loop-Congressional supporters of the payment ceiling had hoped it would save taxpayers $60 million this year, principally on cotion, where the biggest subsidies are concentrated. Contrary to their expectations:

• Total farm subsidies, more than $3 billion last year on cotton. wheat and feed grains, will not be lowered as a result of the payment restriction.

. Many big farmers, like Scn. Eastland, have legally circumvented the subsidy lunit. The sension and his family will receive only slightly less than their payments last year. The Eastlands avoided the $55,000 maximum payment by creating eight new business entitles to farm their 5,200-acre plantation in the cotton-rich Mississippi

· Actor Wayne and his part ners will get about $218,000-far less than their 1970 payments of $810,000-for Arizona cotton ranches named "Red River."
"Rio Bravo." and "El Dorado" after Wayne movies. The government, however, won't save any money. More than $500,000 in federal checks that formerly went to the Wayne group will be paid instead to other farmers and investors. They, in turn, pald $100,000 to lease his land and his valuable federal cotton allot-

The J. G. Boswell Co., which last year received $4.4 millionthe country's biggest single farm payment—this year won't receive anything from the government. Instead, most of the payments that would have gone to Boswell will gu to a combine of 53 investors. This combine and others paid Boswell about $1.3 million for a one-year lease of the firm's cotton allotments. They also will pay Boswell to farm their leased land. Each of the more than 50 investors can receive the maximum $55,000 subsidy. Again, the government won't save any

• Far more cotton will be grown this year, as giant operators like Boswell continue to plant their own land, but without federal subsidies. Boswell and other large corporate farmers may this year experience some reduction in total income. But they now, in effect, have the farm program "both ways." They get substantial cash by leasing their cotton allotments to others, for use on other land, and then are free to grow as much cotton on their own land as they want without any of the restrictions of the farm program. Boswell has planted 25 percent more cotton this year.

Critics contend that the new Boswell approach runs counter to the basic intent of the farm program, which was designed to support farm prices by limiting production. Farmers were paid federal income supplements in return for their pledge to divert some land from production.

USDA officials say the business maneuvers of Sen. Eastland. Mr. Wayne and Boswell are legal variations on a theme employed by most of the 1,353 largest farm operations that are affected by the $55,000-per-farmer limit. Only 1,353 of several million American farmers received subsidies of more than $55,000 per crop in 1970 and thus are affected by the new payment limit this year. Their 1970 payments totaled $142 million of $3 billion total payments. Only 153 of the 1.353 were wheat or feed grain farmers. The vast majority are big cotton growers in Arizona, California, Mississippi and Texas. These cotton planters had received the huge federal subsidies hecause they operated highly productive land with many acres of federally assigned cotton allotments. These allotments are needed to qualify for government payments. Congressional opponents of big farm subsidy payments are trying to reduce the payment limit to $20,000. The House already has taken this action in an amendment of the 1972 agriculture appropriations bill. But the House bill did not close any of the present loopholes permitting farm

This development, congressional sources say, is expected to emerge from background maneuverings in preparation for an expected Senate floor fight on whether to continue development of the increasingly controversial B-1 bomber, potential successor to the B-52. The administration is asking $370 million to build three proto-

Senate critics of blg defense spending are expected to single out the B-1 as their principal target this session when the $22 hillion military research and procurement authorization bill is reported out by the Senate Armed Services Committee, possibly this week.

The report said that while the remainder of those arrested may have violated some law, only about one-cuarter were actually apprehended by police while committing an illegal act.

Moreover, the commission said it found that the main criterion hy which the arrests were made appeared to be "cvidence of youthfulness," such as long hair, casual dress or the wearing of beards, rather than "evidence of an unlawful act."

as Mr. Kennedy inherited.

Within weeks of President Kennedy's May 11 decision, moreover, the North Vietnamese government made repeated protests to the International Control Commission that its airspace and territory were being violated by foreign aircraft and South Vietnamese ground raids thrusting into the Demilitarized Zone along the horder between the two Vietnams.

In July, 1961, Hanoi announced publicly that it had captured and was putting on trial three South Vietnamese participants in undercover operations who had survived the crash of a plane that was shot down, Hanoi said, while preparing to drop them into North Vietnam. The North Vietnamese, protesting formally to Britain and the Soviet Unionthe co-chairmen of the 1954 Geneva conference on Vietnam-described in detail what they said the survivors had disclosed about their American training and ican military advisers sent to South Vietnam. No publicity was Mr. Kennedy's May 11 orders, the study discloses, also called for infiltration of South Vietnamese forces into southeastern Laos to find and attack Communist bases and supply lines.

On Oct. 13, moreover, the President reportedly gave additional secret orders for allied forces to mission in Saigon, which, if it were done openly, would be the "initiate ground action, including the use of U.S. advisers if necessary," against Communist agrial resupply missions in the vicinity of Tchepone, in the southern Laotian pan-handle.

The Pentagon study does not analyze these covert operations in detail, but it shows Mr. Kennedy's decisions as part of an unbroken sequence that built up to much more ambitious covert warfare against North Vietnam under President Johnson in 1964.

Combat Role For U.S. Men

The analysts handling the Kennedy period put more stress, however, on the evolution of President Kennedy's decision in November, 1961, to expand greatly the Amer-ican military advisory mission in Vietnam and, for the first time, to put American servicemen in combat-support roles that involved them increasingly in actual fight-

In a cablegram to Washington on Nov. 18, cited in the study. Frederick E. Nolting jr., the U.S. ambassador in Saigon, described the significance attached to those He said he had explained

President Ngo Dinh Diem of Sonth Victorm that the new roles of American servicemen "could expose them to enemy

"In response to Diem's ques-tion," Mr. Noiting continued, "[1] said that in my personal opinion these personnel would be authorized to defend themselves if attacked. I pointed out that this was one reason why the decisions were very grave from U.S. standpoint."

The Pentagon study shows President Kennedy facing three main questions on Vietnam during his term of office: whether to make an irrevocable commitment to prevent a Communist victory: whether to commit ground combat units to achieve his ends: whether to give top priority to the military battle against the Viet Cong or to the political reforms necessary for winning popu-

President Kennedy's response during 34 months in office, as the Pentagon account tells it, was to increase American advisers from the internationally accepted level of 685 to roughly 16,000, to put Americans into combat situations-resulting in a tenfold increase in American combat casualties in one year—and eventually to inject the United States into the internal South Vietnamese maneuvering that finally toppled the Diem regime. The judgment of the Pentagon study is that, while President Kennedy's actions stopped short of the fundamental decision to commit ground troops, nonetheless. "the limited-risk gamble undertaken by Eisenhower had been transformed into an unlimited commitment under Kennedy." Later, more cautiously, the study says that Mr. Kennedy's policies produced a "broad commitment" to Vietnam's defense, giving priority to the milltary aspects of the war over

The study also observes that the pervasive assumption in the Kennedy administration was that "the Diem regime's own evident weaknesses—from the 'famous problem of Diem as administrator to the army's lack of offensive spirit-could be cured if enough dedicated Americans, civilians and military, became involved in Sonth Vietnam to show the South Vietnamese, at all levels, how to get on and win the war."

President Kennedy and his senior advisers are described in the study as considering defeat unthinkable and assuming that the mere introduction of Ameri-

bridges, train depots and trucks. cans would provide the South Vietnamese with what the authors call "the elan and style needed to win."

The description of the debates in the Kennedy administration presented in the study are revealing-particularly when the President decides against committing ground troops—because they emerge, in effect, as a rehearsal for the planning in the Johnson ere that led to outright war in 1965. Many of the same officials advanced many of the same arguments, and the intelligence community offered some of the same ominous forewarnings.

JCS Estimate Of Force Need

President Kennedy was told that sending ground troops would he a "shot in the arm" that would 'spark real transformation" of the South Vietnamese Army. The Joint Chiefs of Staff calculated that, at worst, no more than 205,000 American soldiers would be required to cope not only with the Viet Cong but also with North Vletnam and Communist China they should intervene. Both military and civilian advisers contended that American bombing of the North-even the mere threat of it-would hold Hanoi and the other Communist nations at bay.

In secretly urging the first commitment of American ground troops to Vietnam in November, 1961, Gen. Maxwell D. Taylor, then the President's personal military adviser, discounted the risks of a major land war. In a private message to the President from the Philippines, on his way home from Saigon on Nov. 1, he said: "The risks of backing into a major Asian war by way of SVN are present but are not impressive. NVN is extremely vulnerable to conventional bombing, a weakness which should be exploited diplomatically in convincing Hanoi to lay off SVN.

"Both the D.R.V. [Democratic Republic of (North) Vietnam] and the Chicoms would face severe logistical difficulties in trying to maintain strong forces in the field in SEA [Southeast Asia], difficulties which we share but by no means to the same degree. There is no case for fearing a mass onslaught of Communist manpower into SVN and its neighboring states, particularly if our airpower is allowed a free hand against logistical targets."

In Gen. Taylor's recommendations for an initial commitment of 6,000 to 8,000 American ground troops, the account relates, he had a co-author, Walt W. Rostow, then the senior White House aide working on Southeast Asia. On Nov. 5 Secretary of Defense Robert S. McNamara sent President Kennedy a memorandum stating that he and the Joint Chiefs of Staff were "inclined", recommend" Gen. Taylor's proposal-but with the significant warning that much greater troop commitments were likely in the "The struggle may he prolonged and Hanoi and Peiping may in-tervene overtly, the McNamara memorandum told the President. It estimated that even so, "the maximum U.S. forces required on the ground in Southeast Asia will not exceed six divisions, or about 205,000 men."

The President eventually rejected this approach. But the Pentagon study comments that the ground-troop issue so dominated the discussions that Mr. Kennedy's ultimate decisions to approve the advisory buildup and the introduction of combat-support troops was made "without a careful examination" of precisely what it was expected to produce and how.

Fatally Flawed From Outset

The study concludes that the Kennedy strategy was fatally flawed from the outset for political as much as for miliary reasons. It depended, the study notes, on successfully prodding President Diem to undertake the kind of political, economic and social reforms that would, in the slogan of that day, "win the hearts and minds of the people." "The U.S. overall plan to end the insurgency was on shaky ground on the GVN side," the study comments. 'Diem needed the U.S. and the U.S. needed a reformed Diem."

It also says: "If he could not [reform], the U.S. pian to end the insurgency was foredoomed from its inception, for it depended on Vietnamese initiatives to solve a Vietnamese problem." And in the end, the Pentagon account relates, the Kennedy administration concluded that President Dlem could not reform sufficiently and in 1963 abandoned him.

Abandoning President Diem was what Ambassador Eldridge Durbrow had suggested in September, 1960, and again that December, shortly before Mr. Kennedy took office as President. Drawing on the ambassador's reports, among others, a national intelligence estimate provided for Mr. Kennedy on March 28, 1961, gave a bleak appraisal of the situation in Vietnam:

"An extremely critical period for President Ngo Dinh. Diem and the Republic of Vietnam lies immediately ahead. During the past six months the internal security situation has continued to deteriorate and has now reached serious proportions.

'More than one-half of the entire rural region south and southwest of Saigon, as well as some areas to the north, are under considerable Communist control. Some of these areas are in effect denied to all government authority not immediately backed by substantial armed force. The Viet Cong's strength encircles Saigon and has recently begun to move closer in on the city. . . . The deterioration in the position of the Diem government reached a new extreme in November when army paratroop officers joined forces with a number of civilian oppositionists in a narrowly defeated attempt to overthrow Diem. On the surface, Diem's position appears to have improved somewhat since

"However, the facts which gave rise to the coup attempt have not been seriously deal; with and still exist. Discontent with the Diem government continues to be prevalent among intellectual circles and to a lesser degree. among labor and business groups. There has been an increasing disposition within official circles and the army to question Diem's. ability to lead in this period. Many feel that he is unable to rally the people in the fight against the Communists because of his reliance on virtual oneman rule, his toleration of corruption extending even to his immediate entourage, and his refusal to relax a rigid system of public controls."

This assessment, the Pentagon study relates, echoed the themes and even some of the language of Ambassador Durbrow's cablegrams. One of these, on Sept. 24, 1960, suggested that if President Diem was unable to regain support through political and social reforms, "It may become necessary for U.S. government to begin consideration of alternative courses of action and leaders."

However serious the problem in South Vietnam, the situation in Laos was far more critical. "The Western position was in the process of falling apart as Ken-nedy took office," the Pentagon account says.

And during the spring of 1961, when President Kennedy made his first series of Vietnam decisions, Laos-not Vietnam-was the dominant issue and largely determined how Victnam should be handled according to the Pentagon account.

Cease-Fire Sought in Laos

The Eisenhower administration had chosen to back rightist elements in Laos, and by early 1961 they were reeling under Communist and neutralist attacks. President Kennedy chose to seek a political compromise and a military cease-fire rather than to continue to support the Leotian rightists.

Because of this shift in stratery in Laos, the Pentagon study says, the Kennedy administration felt impelled to show strength in Vietnam to reassure America's allies in Asia.

In what the administration saw as a global power competition with the Soviet Union, the account notes. Washington thought it dangerous to give ground too often. On April 12, Mr. Rostow, the senior White House specialist on Southeast Asia and a principal architect of counter-insurgency doctrine, put Vietnam directly before President Kennedy with a memorandum asserting that the time bad come for "gearing up the whole Vietnam operation." He proposed a series of moves that the study calls "pretty close to an agenda" for the Kennedy administration's first high-level review of Vietnam. Among other things Mr. Rostow proposed these measures:

• "The appointment of a fulltime first-rate backstop man in Washington."

 "A possible visit to Vietnam. in the near future by the Vice-President [Lyndon B. Johnson]." · The raising of the MAAG [Military Assistance Advisory Group] ceiling, which involves some diplomacy, unless we can find an alternative way of introducing into the Vietnam operation a substantial number of Special Forces types." "Settling the question of extra funds for Diem." · The tactics of persuading Diem to move more rapidly to broaden the hase of his government, as well as to decrease its centralization and improve its efficiency.

Virtually all the Rostow proposals eventually became policy except his suggestion for a "firstrate backstop man." His candidate, the study notes, was Brig. Gen. Edward G. Lansdale, a iong-time Central Intelligence Agency operative who was close President Diem and who in 1961 was in charge of "special operations" for the Pentagon. The State Department blocked his appointment, the study

South Vietnam Review Ordered

On April 20-the day after the collapse of the Bay of Pigs invasion of Cuba-President Kennedy ordered a quick review of the Vietnam situation. As quoted by Secretary McNamara, the President's instructions were to "appraise . . . the Communist drive to dominate South Vietnam" and his decisions on Vietnam.

"recommend a series of actions military, political and/or economic. overt and or covert) which, in your opinion, will prevent Communist domination of that country."

The task force, headed by Roswell L. Gilpatric, deputy secretary of defense, turned in its report on April 27. The report, quote in the Pentagon study, recommended a 100-man increase in the American military advisory mission in Saigon, more American arms and aid for the Vietnamese regional forces known as the Civil Guard, the release of funds for a previously approved expansion of the South Vietnamese Army and the dropping of earlier conditions that President Diem undertake political and social reforms in return. Allied efforts, the report said, should be infused with a sense of urgency to impress friends and foes alike that "come what may, the U.S. intends to win this battle." The emphasis was in the original report.

Even hefore the report was submitted, it was overtaken by events: The Laotian crisis was at its peak. President Kennedy met with the National Security Council on April 26 to decide whether to send troops into Laos. Late that night the Joint Chiefs of Staff alerted the commander in chief of Pacific forces, Adm Harry D. Felt, "to be prepared to undertake air strikes against North Vietnam, and possibly southern China," the account

Overnight the Vietnam recommendations changed. "As insurance against a conventional of South Vietnam through the eastern, mountainous portions of Laos, the Gilpatrie task force recommended quick expansion of the South Vietnamese Army by two divisions -40,000 men-plus the first major input of American troops, as training forces, according to the Pentagon study, The April 38 "Laos annex." the narrative recounts, called for "a 1,600-man [American] training team for each of the two new [South Vietnamese] divisions, pius a 400-man Special Forces contingent to speed up counter-insurgency work: a total of 3,600 On April 29-described in the narrative as a day of "prolonged crisis meetings at the White House"-Adm. Felt was alerted to prepare to move one American combat brigade of 5,000 men with air elements to northeastern Thailand and another to Da Nang, on the South Vietnamese coast, as a threat to intervene in Laos. "Decision to make these deploy-ments not firm," the Joint Chiefs of Staff cabled Adm. Felt. The tactics were directly related to the Laos crisis. Acting on Vietnam that day, the study reports, President Ken-nedy approved the modest 100man increase in the American advisory mission and a few other steps suggested in the first Gilpatric task force's report. "The only substantial significance that can be read into these April 29 decisions," the analyst writes. "is that they signaled willingness to go beyond the 685man limit of the U.S. military mission in Salgon," Publicity would have entailed "the first". formal breach of the Geneva agreements, the study says, so the move was kept quiet.

By May 1 the acute fever of the Laos crisis had eased, the account goes on, and there was a strong sense... that the U.S. would not go into Laos: that if the cease-fire failed, we would make a strong stand, instead, in Thailand and Vietnam."

Johnson Sent On Asia Trip

Vietnam planning was directly affected. The State Department drafted the first of several revisions to tone down the Gilpatric task force's recommendations. When the task-force report finally went before the National Security Council on May 9, the study recounts, the State Department had largely prevailed. Shortly before that the White House amounced that Vice-President Johnson was leaving within days for a trip to Saigon and other Asian capitals. The final task-force report, quoted in the Pentagon account, recommended the deployment of 400 Special Forces soldiers and immediate Pentagon study of a further buildnp "in preparation for possible commitment of U.S. forces to Vietnam, which might result from an NSC decision following discussions he-tween Vice-President Johnson and President Diem." The idea of sending 3,200 other soldiers right away was dropped.

In place of a Pentagon proposal made on May 1 for unilateral American intervention in Vietnam if that became necessary to "save the country from Communism." the final report by the Gilpatric task force proposed a new "bilateral arrangement with Vietnam." "On the grounds that the Geneva accords have placed inhibitions upon Free World action while at the same time placing no restrictions upon the Communists." the report said. "Ambassador Noiting should be instructed to enter into preliminary discussions with Diem regarding the possibility of a defensive security alliance despite the inconsistency of such action with the Geneva accords... Communist violations, therefore, justify the establishment of the security arrangements herein recommended."

The 570-page novel deals with the crushing defeat of the tsarist army in East Prussia in the first ten days of World War I, a pcriod many historians ere as having opened the way to revolution civil war, terror and Bolshevik dictatorship. Mr. Solzhenitsyn, sacluded in the dacha outside Moscow of his friend Mstislay Rostropovich, the cellist, is now working on a second volume that will bring history to the Stalinist era, Mr. Walter said.

With scores of publishers from at least ten countries bidding for "August 1914," it is estimated that the book will realize $2 million in advance royalties before it is translated and published in the West, probably in August 1972.

The bldding, Mr. Walter said, escalated daily since the novel was published last month in Russian by the YMCA Press, a small Russian-language house operated by emigres in Paris, as a way of establishing the author's copyright. Mr. Solzhenits in authorized publication abroad after the Soviet authorities refused to hit the ban on his works in the Soviet Union according to the German publisher.

Because he believes personal relations still count in literary publishing, Roger W. Straus ir. president of Farrar, made a quick trip to Frankfurt last week to discuss the American publishing terms with Mr. Walter.

"I just thought that we had a better case and I wanted to present it myself," Mr. Straus said today. "I am glad to say that personal relations still cut more ice in publishing than cabled bids of buge sums of money." Without attempting to conceal his delight over the outcome of his mission, the publisher said that over the weekend he had sold the book club rights "for a fair price" to the Book-of-the Month Club. Although he declined to disclose the amount, other publishing sources said it was about $200,000.

So if your company wants to do business in Denmark, we can help.

Your local AEIBC banker will contact the American Express Bank A/S specialists in Copenhagen. He can help you establish important contacts. Advise you on Danish trade regulations. Political and economic conditions. Exchange controls. Local business practices.

All of which can be a big help in locating suppliers and importers in Denmark. And in judging the profitability of setting up a business relationship with them.

Of course, helping you get established in Denmark isn't the whole story. We can also help you do business more efficiently.

For example, if you're an exporter ready to ship an order, we can advise you on the best method of trade financing. And Cenfex, our network of foreign exchange desks in major capitals, can help you execute your orders at the most advantageous rates.

Our International Money Transfer System may slash float time on your receipt of remittances from Denmark. From weeks to just a day or two. Sometimes even to same-day payment.

For multinational companies, we can also provide a global line of credit. We can lend you a wide range of currencies in custom-tailored packages. All on a single line of credit.

Which brings us to our philosophy of international banking. We don't think it's enough just to help you do business. We want to help you do it profitably.

There's Albania, Cuba and Mongolia. And you can see straight away, however much they might like the taste of our Scotch, they can't admit it. On the other hand, 168 countries love our taste. Youth at the Polls

The constitutional amendment lowering the voting age to 13, which President Nixon signed on Monday, was passed by threefourths of the states with great celerity. There was, indeed, a strong sentiment within the United States for this measure, as an act of justice to men who could be called to serve in the armed forces at 18, but who could not vote on the issues which might send them out to die. But there was an almost equally articolate body of opinion which mistrusted the young, and each demonstration on campus or in the streets gave them ammonition. Nevertheless, justice won out over mletrust and a broad new level of voters will now be eligible to go to the polls.

Will they take advantage of the franchise? Early eigns of youthful registration seem hopeful. But the skeptics can point to many universities, in which the students rioted for greater participation in the government of their institutions and then lapsed into relative apathy when such participation was granted. For their part, the young Americans argue that such participation is essentially meaningless, from their point of view. since other constituencies in the universities -faculty, administration, alumni—will continue to exercise a preponderant influence. And they may use the same argument concerning the vote: the young still constitute a minority; the political structure is stratified and the establishment rulee.

It is true that many changes can and should he made in the American party and governmental structure that might make itas President Nixon urged in his State of the Union message this year-more responsive to the public, and create more centers of power. But a refusal to vote is still a copout and apathy or abstention form one of the most effective tools in the hands of manipulators of the ballot.

The political process can be a boring one at the bottom rungs of the ladders of authority, however exciting for those who are committed to climbing those ladders. It means registration, and the communication of a vote to a slip of paper or a machine after formalities that consume time. And it can mean frustration, when a vote seems lost in an opposition landslide, or when the candidate proves less courageous in office than on the stump.

But that is the way the system works (or stumbles). And it is a far better way than confronting a eingle slate of candidates picked by processes far more arcane than the American party organization. It is, of course, immeasurably better than an arrangement whereby a self-selected leader interprets the will of the people wholly according to his own lights and doesn't bother to concult that will in any formal way whatever. The 18-year-olds cannot expect to transform the system, either in ite workings or its effects overnight. But they are part of itan important part if they choose-and it is not only the game in town for them, but the fairest game available in a highly imperfect world.

The Nixon administration's lukewarm reaction to the new Communist peace proposals in the face of what appears to be a deteriorating military situation in South Vietnam lends some weight to the fear expressed by Dr. Daniel Elisberg, self-acknowledged purveyor of the Pentagon Papers, that the nation may be faced with "a replay of the year 1964."

That was a year, the Pentagon documents reveal, in which the United States government brushed aside possible opportunities for peace and laid plans for wider United States participation in the Vietnam war because officials believed it was essential to prevent a Communist takeover in Saigon.

Then as now, administration officials publicly expressed confidence in the ability of the South Vietnamese to fend for themselves although there were strong private doubts that Saigon's forces could long endure without substantial outside help. Similar doubts surfaced the other day in Saigon as Col. David H. Hackworth, a combat veteran of five years in Vietnam and the most decorated United States officer of the Indochina war, prepared to leave Vietnam and the Army.

"Vietnamization," Col. Hackworth said, "is a word which must be a product of Madison Avenue. It's a public-relations dream. I haven't seen an improvement in ARVN [Army of the Republic of Vietnam]." Echoing Dr. Elisberg's foreboding, the colonel predicted that by 1973, after the American forces have pulled out, "We'll find ourselves with a situation comparable to 1964."

In view of the reverses South Vietnamese troops have suffered this year so far in Laos. Cambodia and more recently in the Mekong Deita and near the DMZ, Col. Hackworth may be overoptimistic. These warning signals and the revealed history of the early sixtles should alert the country to the danger of a new military crisis at any time in Southeast Asia. Such a crisis would pose grave dangers for diminishing American forces and excruciating decisions for the President.

It is clear that President Nixon has learned one lesson from President Johnson's experience—he is not likely to respond to a crisis with a massive reintroduction of ground forces. But it is not so clear that the President has abandoned the blind faith in American air power that so dramatically failed his predecessor. The United States continues to bomb heavily throughout Indochina. The President has repeatedly threatened to renew widescale bombing of North Vietnam if American forces are placed in jeopardy.

To avoid such a replay of 1964, it is essential now to grasp opportunities for peace that were then slighted. The latest Communist peace proposals do not, of course, guarantee against an ultimate Communist takeover in Saigon. Nor do they assure euch an ontcome. But they certainly deserve to be fully explored. They appear to offer the United States an opportunity to extricate its troops and prisoners in eafety from this misadventure in Southeast Asia, leaving the future of Vietnam to the Vietnamese-which is what should have been done in the first

THE NEW YORK TIMES.

International Opinion

Police and Press

The French police have seldom had a very good press on either side of the Channel and they have often given the press quite as rough treatment as they got from it. But not since the end of the Algerian war can relations between the two have been so bad as they are at present as a result of the "Alain Jaubert Affair." That the French police use violence not only during but after demonstrations, and sometimes against people who were not even demonstrating. let alone using violence themselvee, can hardly be news to any Parisian journalist; and it eeeme unfortunate that the French press should have waited until one of its own members was the victim before launching a major campaign on the issue.

Inevitably, one result of the affair has been to increase the resentment felt by the police against the public in general and the press in particular. The episode the following weekend, when the police failed to intervene for several hours while a crowd smashed and billaged shops in the Latin Quarter, was widely interpreted as a demonstration that the police are a public necessity rather than a public menaca. The police officer responsible was at once removed from his post for "an error of appreciation" whereas the ease of those who allegedly beat up M. Janbert is being treated by the minister as being sub judice. This procedure is perhaps justifiable but it reinforces a widespread impression that the government regards police excesses as a less serious matter than police negligence; and this order of priorities is inevitably reflected in the behavior of the police themselvee.

-From the Times (London).

The Viet Cong Peace Plan

Inevitably, like other peace plans before it from both sides, this one bas much in it that is simply public relations. The sticking point is still the question of the postwar administration. The Viet Cong argue that free elections cannot be held while the American presence distorts the political situation in Saigon. They point to the restrictions already being imposed on the September presidential elections. The Americans respond that free elections cannot be held without some countervailing influence to the Viet Cong's military strength.

Both sides are right. A peace cettlement will have to be based on some middle ground. The theory of "Vietnamization" has moved toward it by saying that Saigon could be left to deal with the political issue from a position of some strength without indefinite American backing.

High-Profile Economics

By Joseph Kraft

WASHINGTON.—In economic policy the Nixon ad-ministration etarted off with a deliberately low profile, discreet, careful, and thus easy to adjust in changing circumstances. But last week the low-profile policy was suddenly reaffirmed in high

Behind the change there is an apparent confidence that the policy mix of the past years is truly working. But if that estimate is wrong, the administra-tion will find it that much harder to shift gears, and the result could be a truly sick economy and tough political going for the President in 1972,

The most revealing of the changes is the designation of Secretary of the Treasury John Connally as the administration's chief spokesman on economic McCracken of the Council of Economic Advisers. The personal contrast between the two men announces what that change is

Dr. McCracken is a gnomish academic, keenly sensitive to the uncertainties of trade-offe that inevitably make economic forecasting a hazardous business. While his careful statements earn him the respect of professional colleagues, he personifies to the mass aodience an administration not sure of itself. He ie Mr. Low Profile in person.

Secretary Connally is about as unsure of himself as his native state of Texas is small. Brisk and decisive in manner, he likes to click off his points one, two. three, four. His emergence as economic spokesman means that the administration is going out on a limb-ending all uncertainty about what its policies truly are. The starting point is a hard-nosed attitude toward those on the lower rungs of the economie ladder. In his first statement as spokesman, Mr. Connally indicated that the administration was not going to take the fiscal steps-increased spending or a tax cut-necessary to promote full employment soon. In the same vein Mr. Nixon vetoed a $2 billion public works bill pusbed through the Congress by the Democrats to create mora lowincome jobs. It is a near certainty that un-

The administration is now going to live with that amount of unemployment unabashedly. Indeed, Mr. Connally called the 4 percent figure, which is generally used as the equivalent of full employment, a "myth" only attained during wartime.

If the administration is openly moving toward acceptance of 6 percent unemployment, bowever, it is also advertising its readiness to belp the great majority who bave jobs. For one thing, there will be no wage and price con-trol. That means a lot to workers who are just beginning to catch up with the price increases of the past few years.

Additionally, the administration is helping the middle-income professionals threatened by recent cuts in defense and space spend-ing. The special bill that would authorize $250 million 1 to the Lockheed Company is one obvious case in point.

Finally, the vast number of Americans in position to make money through lower interest rates are going to get a highly visible break. With public service outlays from the federal budget held in check, the Federal Reserve Board will be under pressure to keep money flowing freely into the banking system. That figures to keep interest rates down. Low interest rates should ginger up the stock market, the housing market, and that part of merchandising dependent on installment buying.

Loud and Clear

Several conditions explain the decision to come out publicly with a policy that had previously been stated only implicitly. For one thing, the administration's chief economic planner, Director George Shultz of the Office of Management and Budget, is convinced that recovery is assured by 1972. He feels that the only obstacle is uncertainty and a lack of confidence. Talking out loud and clear, he figures, will promote confidence and thus increase the likelihood of achieving genuinely good economic conditions by election year.

Moreover, ambiguity in the past has built pressures on Mr. Shultz to shift his policy. Chairman Arthur Burns of the Federal Reserve Board and many Democrats have been pushing approaching a decisive moment in his presidency. Developments abroad and at home press for a fundamental reappraisal of his policy on Vietnam. His response on that issue in the coming weeks could affect the character that history will give him -as a divisive President or one who, as he wished, belved to bring a shattered country together.

The quickening movement of events on Vietnam is unmistakable. In Paris, the other side in the peace talks has made a specific offer to return all American prisoners if the United States commits itself to early and total withdrawal. In Victnam, U.S. military leaders are indicating a willingness, indeed a desire, to speed op the pace of troop withdrawals. At home, political cupport for continuing involvement in Vietnam without limit is visibly orumbling.

The Communist initiative in the Paris talks has the effect of removing an important ecometic element from the Nixon policy. That is the President's argument that we must keep forces in Vistnam indefinitely in order to get the prisoners freed.

Efficacy

It has been perfectly clear all along that the prisoners were more likely to be released if we got out of the war than if wa stayed in—the point now made explicit in Paris. But by emphasizing concern for the prisoners, and talking in extreme terms about their "barbaric" treatment, the President has distracted attention from his more serious reason for refusing to set a final withdrawal date: tha fear that such a commitment would undermine the Saigon government and open the way for a quick Communist takeover in Sooth Viet-

Since taking office, Mr. Nixon has not retreated from the objective of assuring an anti-Communist government in Saigon for at least some years ahead. He has tried to win American public acceptance of the burdens involved by use of the prisoner issue and by gradual troop with-

But now the prisoner issue is effectively neutralized, and public opinion has become disaffected far beyond the point of being satisfied by gradual withdrawal: publication of the Pentagon Papers has only deepened existing doubts about the whole basis of the American role in Victnam. And American military attitudes are changing. More and more professional officers are desperately worried et the effect of Vietnam on the U.S. Army: the T ONDON, - Richard Nixon is drug addiction, the failed esprit. They fear it will get worse in the last phases of a withdrawal with no declared end. They want the troops home as soon as possible. to begin the re-creation of morale. It was eurely no accident when Secretary of Defense Laird said > this year, though much equipment would have to be left behind.

A Reappraisal All these elements are pushing Nixon toward a reappraisal of policy. The question is whether he is now ready to set a date for the end of all U.S. military activity in Vietnam and to risk the effect on Saigon.

the other day that he could get all the men out by the end of

It is not an easy question for the President. His concern about the possibility of a Communist South Vietnam has behind it the sincerity of lifelong belief. But in the choice he faces, the risks are not all one way ...

To stay with the present policy could mean a reduced U.S. force beleaguered in Vietnam next year. It could mean re-election this fall of a rigid Saigon government unable to accommodate to the changed political circumstances of eventual American withdrawal It could mean an American public oninion so embittered that it would turn against even the minimum obligations of honor to Vietnam, such as continuing aid.

The effect on his own country ought to concern the President Americans ara yearning now for a leadership that will bring them together. They are tired of all the overreaching of recent years, the excesses of seal on one side and another. They must bave an end to the symbol of division, our part in the killing in Vietnam. "The peace we seek to win is not victory over any other people but the peace that comes with heating in its wings." The words are President Nixon's, in his inaugural address.

torial that attacked the Saturday Evening Post for revealing nations of the National Security Council during the Cuban crisis six weeks before. In an editorial titled. Breach of Security" The New York Times intoned, "How can advisers to the President be expected to give advice freely and easily and at all times honestly and with complete integrity if they have to worry about what their arguments will look like in print a few weeks

But if Lasky was saying The New York Times had changed its tune, what would he have said of the Jackson (Miss.) Clarion-Ledger?

The Clarion-Ledger, politically conservative, has no love lost for The Maw York Times. The news paper went out of its way in an editorial to recall a New York Times series "that depicted Fide Castro as a sort of Robin Hood bent on agrarian reform." The Clarion-Ledger also criticized the decision to publish the Pentagon Papers.

"Having said all that," thi paper concluded, "we believe the government move to suppress the publication was a mistake The right of the people of the nation to know what newspapers can turn up is indisputable."

Another conservative made very uncomfortable by the flap was William Loeb, publisher of the Manchester, N.H., Union-Leader. In a front-page editorial, in bold face type, Loeb wrote:

"This newspaper finds it dif-ficult to determine who presents the more disgusting sight, the left-wing newspapers and the left-wing political leaders in the United States who seem deter-mined to vilify their own nation. their own flag, even their armed forces, or the Nixon administration on the other band, which is so inept and etupid in its presentation to the American people of what is actually a very good case for the Vietnam war."

Obviously, not all the press was ready to back The New York rimes. The Birmingham, Als., News said: "Whether or not the thief who took [the papers] and the newspaper editors and the peace-at-any-price activists who read them consider their publication dangerous to the national interest, the person who stamped them top secret had reason to do

So long as that stamp was on them, the theft was a violation of the law and the publication, however rationalized, was the height of irresponsibility."

The Detroit News said maily that it "does not agree with those of our press colleagues contending that national interest—and the cause of a free press—are seved by the current battle over publication of secret Pentagon papers." At its extreme, the paper side, the practice would allow publicaintelligence reports, which would result in a disastrous (for the press) collision between pressfreedom and the manifest democratic ne ment." The editors added that the News "does not want the freedom of press so important to our existence stretched to justify this type of irresponsibility."

Gallup Poll

Newsweek magazine commissioned the Gallup poli to find out what a representative sampling of Americans thought about the publication of the papers.

Gallup reported 46 percent of the people polled said they dis-approved of government attempts to keep the paper from publishe ing; 33 percent favored the gevernment and 19 percent had no opinion. Yet, an almost identical plurality felt that there was greater harm done to national security by publishing the doouments than to freedom of the press by the attempts to block

A majority-56 percent-felt that the government keeps too much information secret, but the same percentage felt the prest " too quick to print classified material whether or not it might hurt national security.
In short the poll indicates that publication.

the public is hardly foursquare behind what The New York Times and other papers did, and most are just as dubious about the judgment of the government. And then, of course, there are those people who have no opinion at all. In the Newsweek poll they ranged from 12 to 19 percent of the total up to one adult in five. Not every paper received con-troversial reactions from its readers caders: The Montana Standard in Butte ran wire service stories on the Pentagon Papere, editoriala. columns and cartoons frey Gibson, editor of the editorial page, reports he ham't received a single letter from a reader on the "In my experience there damped little reaction in this community to enything that happens outside Butte," Gibson says.

To the uninspired observer it might seem that Riquet had discovered nothing except, a little belatedly, that water runs downhill.

The story of the Canal du Midi, as it is told today, is marred by a legend reminiscent of the tales. of Archimedes in his bath, Isaac Newton under his apple tree, or James Watt before his tea kettle. Unpicturesqualy, the incident never happened. The second mistake in the accepted version is that it awards credit for the creation of the canal to the wrong In honor of the founder of the canal, the broad esplanade which has replaced the medieval walls of Béziers has been named the Ailtre Paul Riquet; and on them standa David d'Angers's bronze statue of Paul Riquet himself, magnificent in slashed doublet. pulled-out hose, funnel-topped boils and horseman's clock. The wealthy Paul Riquet deserves fuil credit for foresight, as the con-tractor who promoted and financed the construction of the twu-seas canal; but it was not he who soived the ancient problem of how to do it, though the icg.nd says he did. That problem was how to overcome the obstacle which had checked all previous attempts to cerign a canal-the Black Mountain which is not a mountain. but a range of mountains. The stary as currently recounted, unchallenged, depicts Paul Riquet seated near the Black Mountain wetershed. He notices a stream to his left, running downhill in to his right, running downhill in another direction; and though it is not recorded that he sprang to his feet and cried, "Eurekal" ise understood instantaneously how to build the canal. To the uninspired observer, it might nothing except, a little bristedly, that water runs downlill. But for the many retailers of this story, he had learned much more, "Ri-quel's natural genious," one admiring commentator explained, made up for his lack of acqueintance with geometry and hydraulies; and he conceived and executed the Canal of Languedoc

Even in the time of Louis XIV, major projects of this kind were not improvised "without preliminary studies"; and this would have been particularly true for an enterprise carried out with such exactitude that, though digging started simultaneously at three different points along the 140-mile route of the canal, no corrections were required when the different sections met to bring them into line with each other This meant planning, and the way of it was this:

In the year 1660, Riquet had in without preliminary studies."

François Andréossy, unnamed in the legend, who is described as a mathematician"—a term which in those days covered more ground than it does now; suppose we call him a physicist. Intrigued by the idea of a two-seas canal Andréosey drew up a report for Riquet which concluded that its construction was in principle feasible, and then set out for Italy, where he inspected the only works then existing which were pertinent to his projectcanais for navigable waterways built by Leonardo da Vinci in 1497. On his return, he drew up the first of a series of detailed plans for the execution of the work. He was 27 at the time.

his service a young man named

Andréossy's predecessors had all counted on filling the canal with water raised from below from the Garonne River, for instance: ond all of them had discovered that it was impracticable to ilft a sufficient volume of water to the height required, Andréossy's solution was to feed tile canal with woter, not from below, but from above. To do this, he diverted the streamlets of the Black Mountain, above the pass through which the canal had to flow, into enormous reservoirs, was supplied with water from these reservoirs when its first sector was started, in 1665, and it is still being supplied from them today.

Riquet's great merit was that he recognized the value of Andreessy's plan and backed it to the limit. He had loaned the king considerable sums of money for the upkeep of his armies in Catalonia and therefore had influence at court. He persuaded Louis XIV's chief minister, Colbert, to espouse the project, partiy by pledging that in exchange for a concession to operate the canai, he would throw all his personal fortune into its realization This he did, even to the extent of depriving his daughters ol their dowries, an act for which time. They had occasion later to reverse their opinion of what they had considered his foliy. For though Riquet himself died. all but ruined, six months before the canal was completed, his heir: were enriched during more than a century by the revenues of the canal-until the French Revolution took it away from

It was Andrépssy who planned and directed the building of the canal, from the Garonne, which runs to the Atlantic, to the Lagoon of Thau, on which Riquet built the still flourishing Mediterranean port of Setc. He showed infinite ingenuity in solving bad ever encountered before. He placed a double lock at Toulouse. where the canal enters the Garonne, to protect it from the floods of the river. He built a round three-level lock where the canal met the Hérault at the exact point where a dam had been built to supply water to the mills which lined its banks; barges could turn within it to rise to the river's upper level, or descend to the lower one.

Where the canal crossed the torrent of the Libron, which could be counted upon to pro-duce inconveniently some 12 flash floods a year, he installed a movable cradle the called it a rafit which could be put in place in 20 minutes when the torrent rose to give the floodwaters passage without silting up the canal, And just outside of Béziers, he built his "water staircase." where eight barges 80 feet. In his day, it took an hour and a quarter to elimb the stairs, but recently I timed one of the 40 barges still operating on the canal at 25 minutes

Andreossy scored a political as when he reached the hills of Molpas, a barrier which, Riquet's enemies delightedly imagined would provoke a lengthy and costly detour; and they secured a decree that work be stopped until an investigating committee could examine a situation described as ruinous. When the decree arrived, it was too late. The canal had already passed the hills: Andréossy had simply tunneled under them. The tun-nel is still there and still in use.

Vauban visited the canal after It had been finished and ex-pressed his admiration—and also his surprise "at not seeing there otalues of Riquet and Andreossy. the anthors of this great under-taking," Riquet has his statue today, but there is none to Andrecssy. After Paul Riquet's death, his beirs shouldered him out. He died in 1688, at 55, so emblttered by lack of recognition of his exploit that his family felt chagrin had shortened his life. The Canal du Midt remains his only monument, and it is auonymcus. Susan Sontag as Movie Director

By Thomas Quinn Curtiss

DARIS (IRT),-"I am not a film critto," said writer Susan Sontag. She did not raise her pleasant, low voice but her delivery of it was emphatic. She is tall and slender with alert, brown cycs and wears her dark locks long. Dressed in a sweater, slacks and a leather coat, as she lunched at the Brasserie Lipp the other day, she might have been mistaken for an artist's model, but never for a film critic.

She has become however, a film director. She has made two films in Sweden—writing and directing both-and the is now preparing to shoot a motion picture in Paris.

"Some time ago I wrote a few essaya on directors I admire-Bergman, Godard and Resnais," she said, explaining bow sha has rome to be erroneously classed as a film critic. Actually, if she will permit the contradiction, she is perceptive analyst of the vinema, but she has never served as a reviewer, though she has served as juror at the Venice

The movies have fascinated me since childhood," she recalled. "My mother, who lived in Los Angeles during the First World War, was often an extra in the Griffith productions. The pay was a dollar a day then, but that

I suffered from chronic asthma, the Proust complaint, so we moved to Arizona, and I grew up in a little town there—one third of the population were tourists with respiratory ailments, one third was white and one third was Indian.

One day a movie company arrived for location shooting on 'Duel in the Sun,' King Vidor, the director, gave me an extra part, that of an Indian girl. I never wanted to be an actress, but I did want to find out everything about the movies. Later we moved to Los Angeles and I studied at Hollywood High, beforc entering Berkeley at 15. Hol-

Miss Sontag spent a year at Berkeley and then transferred to the University of Chicago where she obtained her first degree, a BA and fulfilled the requirements for a PhD. At 17, she married professor, Philip Rieff, and logether they wrote the book "Freud. The Mind of a Moralist." The marriage ended in separation and their son is now a college

Expression na 1960s, it seemed to me that the movies-with the new ware breakthrough and the Swedish films-bad discovered a unique form of expression," Miss Sontag continued. "I became passionately interested in this development and wrote about it. I began a serious study of the movies from their start. Each summer I came to Paris to attend the showings at the Cinemathèque. That was an education in itself. I never went to film school and I learned about film technique-in as far as it was possible-from going on the sets, watching directors and actors at work and in sitting in on the editing, spying out how film was achieved. I was traveling in Greece when Jules Dassin was at work on "Phèdre" there and got a job as an extra so that I could observe. I went through its creation from the first "take" to the cutting.

Three years ago-out of the blue, as it were-I was invited to go to Sweden and make a film. How could I resist such enallenge? I wrote the scrip). 'Duct for Cannibals,' and I engaged a cast of four Swedish actors who spoke excellent English. didn't speak Swedish, but we had to film in Swedish."

"Duet for Cannibals," seen here last year, concerned two couples -a professor and his wife and o younger pair-whose lives become entangled. It was widely shown and discussed and proved sufliciently ouccessful to bring Miss Sontag an offer to do another film in Stockbolm. The second film, "Brother Carl," was shot in English with an aeting company of six, two of whom were French players: Geneviève Page and Laurent Terzieff. It will be released here in the fall.

Translation Miss Sontag's novels ("The Benefactor" and "Death Kit": and her collections of essays on a variety of subjects-from politics to anthropology—have been translated into 18 languages. She does not intend, she says, to abandon literature for the cinema, preferring to work at both. "As I see it the two are dif-

a doctor and an engraver. It is the direction of films that interests me, but I don't want to make films of my novels. "The film I am preparing to shoot in Paris is an adaptation of Simone de Beauvoir's novel, 'L'Invitée,' published in English as 'She Came To Stay.' It is a trlangle tale and is set in Montparnasse on the eve of World War II. I want to make it in French. I always think it's absurd in the movies when all the Parisian café waiters and every-Jeanne Moreau probably act the leading role, that of a woman who almost loses ber mate to a young girl. I bope I will be able to capture the scene of prewar Paris."

Miss Sontag's first film, "Duct for Cannibals," has been compared to Bergman in style, but she does not think the Swedish director has had much influence on her work, despite her admiration of him.

"I think Fritz Lang and, in a degree, Hitchcock were my guides," she remarked. "The sinister professor in my film is a descendant of Dr. Mabuse. The German and Russian silents were the greatest of all movies, but my taste is very catholic. My favorite Swedish film is from the silent era: Stiller's 'Erotica,' and favorite French film Renoir's 'La Regia du Jeu.' would pass up almost any new film lo see an old one by Lubitsch. Isn't 'Angel' delightful? I hope to do a biographical film after Paris, the life of a saint wbo founded an order. But, first things first, so I must go home and continue writing the screen adaptation of the Beauvoir novel.

And for all of Europe, there's no better medium than the Herald Tribune, the newspaper the significant Europeans read.

Schools.

Where to send them to school? The Education Directory is a regular feature of the International Herald Tribune. Schools and other educational services all over Europe are listed - for the eager-to-learn from six to sixty.

Services.

Whether you walk dogs or clean rugs or administer trusts, tell prospects what you do in the pages of the Herald Tribune. It's the one international daily newspaper in all of Europe — the one paper on sale each morning from Oslo to Naples.

Fashion.

Mini, midi, maxi-which? The fashion writers of the Herald Tribune will go to any length to keep you fully informed. So will our advertisers!

Read the Herald Tribune for all the very latest news of what's new, what's on sale where.

Theater.

The Trib has its own " first nighters " all over Europe... and reports regularly on the New York stage as well:

If it's the smell of greasepaint and the roar of the crowd you're after, then you ought to read the Tribune every day.

Travel.

If you travel a lot, and most Herald Tribune readers do, read the ads for airlines, hotels and resorts in this paper.

You'll find they're a help in planning your itinerary - especially when you go to places you haven't visited before.

Wall St.

Did you lose a paper fortune yesterday? Make a killing in cocoa? Find out in the daily Wall St. listings in the Tribune. We cover both New York and American exchanges... mutual funds and commodity prices, too. Every day of the week.

Art.

Every week the Herald Tribune reports on the wonderful world of art in Europe: what's new, old and interesting everywhere. That includes galleries and the auction houses, too: it's important reading if you paint, sculpt or merely collect.

You get so much more in the Herald Tribune.

German Steel Industry to Be Reorganized

BRUSSELS, July 5 (AP-DJ) -The European Economic Com-munity is working to organize the West German steel industry into four cartel-like "rationalization groups," officials say.

The EEC Executive Commission has insisted that the industry drop the idea of production quotas for each firm, but it is permitting them to share out the market by agreements among individual firms to specialize in particular products. These agree-ments will cover major steel

The object is to provide for an orderly market without preventing competition.

Until new this has been done through four sales organizations. The new "rationalization groups" have virtually the same member-

The sales organizations were set up in 1967 with the approval of the European Coal and Steel Community, which has since been absorbed by the Common Market, Authorization for that arrangement expired on June 30. The new pact will be made retroactive to July 1, after final proposals are made and approv-ed by the Executive Commission. The commission announced last ek that the first proposals by the West German firms were not in second with the Treaty of BASEL, July 5. (AP-DJ.) Eurodollars to be withdrawn will Major central banks have come be decided by major central up with a plan to restrain en-banks on the nosis of recom-

Rate of Interest

Persuading outside institutions to jobn will depend comewhat on the terms offered, officials say. Escentially, the facility will permit central banks to deposit dollar reserves at the BIS, which would reinvest the funds with the New York Reserve Bank at a rate of interest between the United States Treasury bill rate and higher Eurodollar rates.

Though central banks using the facility would thus forgo a slightly higher yield on their dolhar reserves, they probably could be persuaded to help control Eurodollar supplies if the loss of interest is not too large.

It seems doubtful, however, that Communist institutions and some Mideast and African comtries' would be willing to forgo higher yields on their Eurodollar placements just for the sake of cooperation with Western central banks. Nevertheless, some cen-tral bankers contend that even partial participation of the ont-side group would permit effective regulation because of the "reserve multiplier effect" of what they call "high-powered money."

Of the 15 billion officially owned dollars placed on the Eurodollar market, a portion has been resold to central banks, which placed some of them on the market, thus multiplying the amount of Eurodollars.

Officials maintain that once these reserve Eurodollars are withdrawn, the process will be reversed, so that the contraction of the Eurodollar market from its estimated size of about $53 billion will be much larger than the actual withdrawals.

May Deficit Reported by Bundesbank

Payments Imbalance Put at 23 Million DM

PRANKFURT, July 5 (AP-DJ). -West Germany had a basic payments deficit of 23 million deutsche marks in May, compared with an April surplus of 1.193 bil-Hon DM and a surplus of 378 million DM a year earlier, the Bundeshank reported today.

The overall payments balance, including West Germany's International Monetary Fund position and special drawing rights, how-cres, showed a May surplus of 7.84 billion DM, up from an April surplus of 3.175 billion DM and 2 May, 1970, surplus of L11 bil-

All May figures are preliminary,

For the first five months of the current year, the basic hal-ance closed with a preliminary 1.26 billion DM surplus, up from a 4.097 billion DM deficit in the like 1970 period.

Overall Belance

The five-month overall balance showed a preliminary 19.818 hillion DM surplus, which compared with a 3.083 billion DM surplus in like 1970.

The Bundeshank considers the basic payments balance the best indicator of the country's payments situation. It comprises current eccounts and long-term capital movements.

The current account was 68 million DM in surplus in May, against an April deficit of 73 million and a 455 million surplus a year earlier.

The five-month current-account balance showed a surplus of 199 million DM, down from a 610 million surplus in the like 1970

Long-term capital movements were 91 million DM to deflett in May, against a surplus of 1.266 billion DM in April and a deficit of 77 million DM in May, 1970. Long-term transactions in the five-month period were 1,061 biltion DM in surplus, versus a deficit of 4.707 billion DM a year

Short-Term Influx

On balance, short-term capital movements showed an influx of 3.984 billion DM in May, up from 1.087 billion in April and 801 mil-

For the five-month period; short-term transactions resulted in a 4.519 billion DM surplus on e. no from a surplus of 2.787 billion in the like 1970

The central bank also reported that since it resumed its activities on the foreign-exchange market in early June as a seller of United States dollars, its net monetary reserves declined on balance by 7.8 billion DM to 69.9 billion DM last month.

Reserves Decline

The hank also said that foreign exchange reserves fell 1.914 billion deutsche marks to $8.649 billion DM in the week ended June 30.

Overall monetary reserves deelined to 62.880 billion DM from 64.721 billion the preceding week. Gold reserves fell 1.834,000 DM to 14.579 billion DM while there was an increase in the drawing rights on the gold tranche at the International Monetary Pund of 74,299,000 DM to 3.644 billion DM. The Bundesbank sold an estimated $280 million today at prices ranging from 3.5009 DM a dollar to 3.5005 DM, foreign exchange dealers here said. The dollar closed at 3.5005 DM. after opening at 3.4995 and being fixed at 3.5007 DM.

European Airbus Buys GE Engine

MUNICH, July 5 (AP.DJ).— The European girbus group has placed an order worth $20 million with General Electric Co. of the United States for the firm's CF 6-50 jet engine.

The order for 20 of the GE engines was announced here to-day by Deutsche Airous, speaking for Airbus Industries of Paris, the management-unit for the European A-300-B airbus.

First deliveries are scheduled for mid-1972. The flight of the first prototype is set for September of that year.

The 'Myth' of 4% Unemployment

By Edwin L. Dale Jr.

WASHINGTON, July 5 (NYT).-Although it was almost lost because of the natural interest in President Nixon's major economic decisions last week, Secretary of the Treasury John B. Connally, in announcing the decisions, let slip an important strand of thought within the govern-

Mr. Connaily used a rather forceful word-"mylli"-to describe the widely-held view among the general public that the United States should regard an unemployment rate of 4 percent of the labor force as the "norm" of full employment. He said this rate had not been achieved in a quarter century except in wartime, which in-oludes the Vietnam period.

This is not a numbers game. Mr. Connolie's view has great implications for government polley, in the sense of how much this or future presidents and Federal Reserve Boards should stimulate the economy.

And there is a fascinating coincidence. Star:ing from distinctly different ideological premises and a different line of reasoning, some liberal economists in the United States have also reached the conclusion that 4 percent unemployment here is now a "myth."

Mr. Connally is a conservative. It has been a conservative habit for a long time to worry a shude more about inflation than about unem-ployment—a thoroughly respectable sense of prioritics-and also, quite frankly, to "explain away" somewhat the unemployment figures.

The secretary did so last week. He related unemployed to defense cutbacks. He showed that the jobless rate for married men was not high relative to past recessions and recover; periods-about 3.3 percent. He emphasized the issue of the "composition" of memployment.

Earlier, Paul McCracken and Herbert Stein, of the Council of Economic Advisers (CEA), talked obout the relatively short duration of unemployment for any given individual, and about the low number of persons out of work for 15 weeks or longer, all to demonstrate that the hardship of unemployment was not as large as popularly imagined. So did George Shultz, then Secretary of Labor and new director of the Office of Management and Budget.

In fact, the duration-and bears the "hardship"-figures have worsened badly in the last six months, with 13 million persons now out of work for 15 weeks or more, and none of those them thinks the present situation is instingly tolerable, and neither does Mr. Connaily.

'Optimum' Concept to Change

But the conclusion remains that at least in this relatively conservative administration and quite possibly in a future democratic administration, the ideas of an "optimum" unemployment rate in the United States are probably under-

Mr. Connaily is saying that the nation can have well-being, including strong employment among the nation's breadwinners, with a higher total unemployment rate than 4 percent. And lie is saying implicity that this is going to have to be if the nation is to avoid perpetual inflation of serious dimensions, as is associated with war. He is the first powerful government official to

Mr. Connally, it is safe to say, does not believe an unemployment rate as low as 4 percent is compatible with a stable dollar, and he cares about a stable dollar. It is a profound concinsion, and one that will not go away.

WASHINGTON, July 5 (NYT). By the end of May the United States had become the world's largest user of special drawing rights, or "paper gold," the In-ternational Monetary Fund reported today.

The United States by then had "spent" $237 million of its SDRs to purchase unwinted dollars from others. The transactions in May included transfers of $55 million of SDRs to Belginm and $150 million to the Netherlands-both countries that do not traditionally retain large holdings of dollars or any other reserve currency.

The transfer to the Netherlands brought that country's holdings of SDRs very close to the limit of the amount it is required to accept, from the United States or any other country. The limit is three times a country's initial allocation. The Netherlands could voluntarily accept more than that

Saudi Arabia Joins Bidders For British North Sea Oil

By John M. Lee

LONDON, July 5 (NYT). - British Petroleum and Shell-Esso Saudi Arabia, guardian of the world's largest oil reserves, is joining the crowd of companies and countries maneuvering to win additional concessions for oil exploration in the British North

Norsk Hydro, a diversified industrial concern largely owned by the Norwegian government and already participating in the oil discoveries in the Norwegian sector of the sea, has also put out feelers to join the action on the British side of the dividing onstrates the depth of interest in the promising British waters. The government here is putting up another 436 blocks covering 38,600 square miles for bid or application by Aug. 20. The competition promises to be in-the government's new offer, Sir John Eden, Minister of Industry, predicted, "We are only at the beginning of the oil-discovering era on the continental shelf."

On the basis of present dis-coveries alone, the British and Norwegian sectors combined should be producing one million barrels of high-quality crude oil a day by the mid-1970s. Such total, roughly equivalent to 10 percent of Western European requirements, is hardly likely to npset European dependence on Airican and Middle East oil, but it is nonetheless quite important for Britain and Norway.

Most of the new British conces sions to be awarded life off the east coast of Scotland. Interest has been running high there since the major discoveries of in the new round of concessions One is the introduction of American-style competitive bid-ting (along the lines of the Alaskan auctions for some of the blocks). The other is the elimination of the requirement that one of Britain's nationalized industries (the Gas Council or the National Coal Board) must be included in any consortium applying for licenses in certain promising

Fifteen blocks are being put np for bid. These are blocks running southwest to northeast off the Orkney and Shetland island groups off the north coast of Scotland, an area along the border between British and Norwegian waters from north of Shetland to Newcastle-Upon-Tyne (including blocks adjacent the British Petroleum and Shell-Esso discoveries), scattered blocks in the gas-producing areas off the English coast from Hull to Norfolk and blocks parallel to the north Cornish coast.

Some 50 companies are said to have been forming various groups to bid and make applications, ranging from the German national oll concern. Deminex, to Occidental Petroleum of Los Angeles, which scored such a success in the 1960s in Libya.

Two approaches to slam bidding are usually available: careful science and carefree bash-There is something to be said for both methods, and the diagramed deal illustrates this. It was played in the semifinal of the Reisinger Knockout Team Championship here last month. North and South at one table produced the scientific auction shown in the diagram. The response of four clubs to one spade was a splinter, showing good spade support, slam prospects and at most one club. There fol-

the ace, king and queen of diamonds. North settled in six spades, judging correctly that a heart finesse would be needed to make a grand slam. He knew that South would have shown secondround control at the six-level if he could have done so in preference to showing third-round control of diamonds.

North's second club bid had pinpointed a void, but West led the club king anyway to avoid giving the declarer help in the other suits. South ruffed in dummy, drew trumps, and claim-ed all the tricks when the heart finesse succeeded.

Matters were more dramatic at the second table. In response to one spade, North bid a direct five no-trump. His plan was to bid seven spades if his partner held the spade ace, duce tricks. This was a double gamble, for the defense might have been able to cash the diamond ace at the first trick, and there was no certainty that the hearts could be run without loss. In reply to the grand slam force, South bid six clubs, showing the ace in the methods of the partnership, and North bld seven spades according to plan.

His gamble succeeded when West, as before, led the club king. This was the wrong opening lead, but it was East, not West, who was at fault. East should have made a Lightner lead-directing double of seven spades and left his partner to work it out.

THE MIDDLE AMERICANS Proud and Uncertain

Text by Robert Coles. Photographs by Jon Erikson. Atlantic, Little Brown. 181 pp. $12.50.

Reviewed by Christopher Lehmann-Haupt

HOW extremely decent of Rohert Coles, the child psychiatrist, and Jon Erikson, the pho-tographer, to give us "The Middle Americans." How sensitive of them to realize that even members of the so-called silent majority—the "average people" who belong to the "white-lower-middle class"-are human. How worthy of them to go "out there" to listen and observe, in order that we-East Coast Establishmentarians, intellectuals, devil-theorists, snobs and woolly-headed intellectuals all—may finally understand. How very thoughtful. And alas, how sad and fronic that in their frenzy of goodwill they have produced a book whose message is at best confused and at worst quite the opposite of what they intended it to be.

For how are we to take "The Middle Americans"? How are we to view Jon Erickson's photographs? (We sample them first since they take up over half the book.) They show us people at work, people at home, people at play. White people. Fat men drinking beer; clusters of signs on roadside diners; women in haircurlers at their froning boards; the Monday wash hung out on the line; parades; picnics; machines; housing projects: drive-in movies: bumper stickers; tasteless interior decor and tasteless art; mass activities and mass artifacts.

Chichés, in short. But what are they supposed to tell us? That we must shun stereotypes and look beneath surfaces? That people are themselves? I don't quite understand.

Or perhaps the pictures are supposed to hustle us—to reinforce the cliches in our heads in preparation for Robert Coles's text? That must be it, for here is Coles near the close of his preface, feeling it: "Again and again we have been compelled to realize how various—wonderfully so, confusingly so—the human beings we here call 'middle Americans' can turn out to be. I realize that at times in this text I struggle vainly to suggest that variety. As one goes from home to home one reaches desperately for more nouns, more adjectives, more modifying phrases-in the perhaps futile hope that what Solution to Previous Puzzle

James Agee called human actuality' somehow will come across." Yet how in fact has Dr. Coles conveyed this "human actuality"? Hardly at all. He has quoted many human words, to be surethe words of people he has come to know around the country over the past lew years—and they are sincere enough, I suppose. But Coles's hands, they issue forth from faceless, anonymous types—people identified only by profession (a policeman, a factory worker, a bank functionary, a state of the college of the col housewife . . .) - people without names, hometowns, milieus, or regions—people with scarcely any specificity at all, and therefore without any gravity. So the impression grows and grows that they are parts of some formless homogenous mass that stretches between New York and Los

Oh, there are exceptional moments here and there—the woman blurting out that 'Hell, I don't know what my views are. I change my mind every other day, I really do." Or the man saying of Vice-President Agnew, "You know. I hate snobs, but you've got to be honest and ask yourself if that man has what it takes up in the head to be President. I don't want a guy there just because he sounds like me shooting my head off over my lunch box."

But such moments lie few and far between in the drone of familiar complaints and the blubber of Dr. Coles's appallingly flaceid prose. (Can his style really have deteriorated so hadly since he wrote the first volume of "The Children of Crisis"? Or is my happy memory of that study of children reacting to the civil-rights movement simply failing me?) And because of the facelessness of Dr. Coles's "Middle Americans," all a reader car recall at the end of the book are the impressions of how bad the Depression was, the resentment: at how little the younger gen erations understand those year the complaints about the shift lessness of blacks, the anger a the liberal intellectuals, and th desperate longings to believe t the American Dream. The tire some litany; in short, precisele the clichéed impression of the "real majority" that Dr. Colset out to dispel.

Why, come to think of it, t. very conception of this boc should be a giveaway. For ho can one possibly hope to conve. actuality of a person that one has already defined as a type? What Dr. Coles is really telling us is that he investigated the elephant, and he is now prepared to believe that it consists not only of a trunk, but one ear as well.

Within the last two weeks, Americans have shattered three world records and five American standards, a pattern un-equaled for a sport that thrives on statistical elamour. More significant, however, to America's gold medal future, the world records were set by athletes who are just old chough to toast their victories, and none of whom competed at the 1968

the 1972 Olympics.

Olympics in Mexico City.
The latest world record to fall was the oldest unequaled individual mark in the books. Velery Brumel of the Soviet Union leaped 7 fect, 5 3.4 inches in the high jump in 1963. and no one had come within 1 1/2 inches of the performance until last Saturday. At an international meet, Pat Matzdorf, a 21-year-old college student from Sheboygan, Wis., cleared 7-8 1/4 on his final attempt.

The high jump is one of track and field's most esthetically appealing events, one of the few that place a man in defrance of the lawe of nature. without the benefit of tools and with a defined obstaclethe cross bar. The most incredible ospect of Matzdori's performance was its spontaniety. He had never cleared higher that 7-2 outdoors, or 7-3 indoors. He had practiced a 7-6 jump ond he had never experienced the subtle, but demanding pressures of competing at the international level.

STOCKHOLM, July 5 (UPI) -Jim Ryun faces Kinchore Keino tomorros over one mile. the first meeting between the two since the Olympic 1,500meter final race in Mexico City in 1968.

The competition between the two should provide the highlight of the two-day July Track and Field Games here. Both runners sey they are close to their prak form and are expeeting real good times. "I have only had one real test before this, when I lost to Marty Liqueri some weeks ago. But comorrow things will be settied." Ryun the world record holder, said today.

Keino would not speculate obout times and winners but eaid that he would try hard to best Eyun sgain,

"I have run here before and know the track well. I am looking forward to the duel with Jim." the Kenyan said.

The one-mile field also includes Dick Quax of New Zealand, Dave Bedford, Britain's European 5,000-meters holder, Ulf Hoegberg of Sweden and Norwegian Arne Kvalheim.

John Smith, the new 400yard world record holder, and discus record holder Jay Silvester will also compete in their specialties.

In the shot put Al Peuerbach of Preston, lowa, will appear for the first time in Sweden Feuerbach is the holder of the indoor world mark, at 63 feet 11 inches.

Ralph Mann of Long Beach Calif., will be in the 400-mcter hurdles. Mann recently set a world season's best of 48.9 seconds in Helsinki.

Trouble at Wimbledon

LONDON,-The Wimbledon ten-pis championships have just finished, and, while the tennis was up to form, a problem srose with the fans which has given lovers of the game a great deal of concern.

An average of 20 male spectators a day were either arrested or warned about their indecent behavior Most of the cases had to do with males "couldn't ld β b o keep their hands to themselves." One man, a lecturer at the Buchwald University of London, was convicted of grabbing a girl above the maist. Pleading guilty, he told the indge. "There seems to be a temporary lack of common sense on my part. It is ridiculous that a person in my position should do such a thing."

The question that immediately arises is. "Why Wimbledon?"

The answer, I discovered, was that "any aporting event where womeo wear hot pabla and where large crowds are shoved together in 'stauding room only' sections must provoke some sort of indecent response."

This was told to me by a foot-fauli judge who has been

Concert Series Set For Fontainebleau

PARIS, July 5 | IHT | . - The 50th anniversary of the Ecoles d'Arc Americaines in Fontainebleau is being celebrated by a series of concerts through July 15 for the benefit of the schools' scholarship fund.

Temorrow at 5:30 pm., Aaron Copland will be joined by Noel Lee Janet Price, Raymond Guiot, Guy Deplus and the Parrenin Quartet.

Subsequent concerts, all at the same time in the Salle dea Colonnes of the Fontainebleau Palace. will be given by Geneviève Joy Jacqueline Robin July 8: Rafael Puyana, July 10; Andre Marchal, July 12; Soulima Stravinsky, playing piano works of his late father, on July 13, and Maurice Gendrop and Jean Francaix on July 15.

don for 30 years. "It's the women who are to blame," he said angrily, "They get themselves all dressed up 10 the flimsiest of coverings, seethrough blouses, micro-minlskirts, the lot, and they expect pien to be shoved against them and behave as if pothing's happening."

We saw three policemen carrving a protesting man in a bowler loward a black van.

"It wasn't always like this." he said. "When Wimbledon was Wimbledon, the women came out in their wool skirts and corsets and the stuff was like armor. If you tried to pinch one of them you'd break your fingers.

"But now look what's happened-20 men a day being picked up for not keeping their eye an The tennis ball. It's doing terrible things to the game. A woman fan hit a dignified man with his own umbrella, and tile police immediately moved in. 'Cou'dn't they have standing room for the men on one side of the court and standing room for wamen an the other side?" suggested.

"It doesn't work like that at Wimhledon. The beauty of watching tennis here is you can walk around from court to court and don't have to stay with one game if you don't want to. Let's go over to Court Four."

We went over to where a large crawd was watching a men's doubles game. "Here we are," he said as we stood shoulder to shoulder breathing down the necks of the girls in front of us. "Now what's a man to do in such a situation?" he asked. I held my hands above my head, to prove, in case anyone screamed, that I was innocent. "You're doing the right thing." he agreed. "but you're not making friends with the people behind you."

We wandered away, and he sald. "Something's got to give. if the women don't put more clothes ou it could be the eod of tennis as we know it." We watched sadly as two bobbies hauled a well-dressed chap into a waiting vehicle. There goes another one." the foot-fault judge sald sadly. "That makes 20 so far, nod they still haven't played the mixed doubles finals on the center court."

Wine for People With Patience

By Burton Anderson

MONTALCINO, Italy (IHT).—A popular conception, not wholly without foundatloo, is that Italiao winemakers take a lighthearted approach to their calling, leaving most of the artistry to the powers that be after a joyful stomp on the grapes. In most years recently the nation has produced more wine than any other, but it would be disrespectful indeed to regard everything known as rino in Italy as the work of Mother

Out of thousands of wines made, no more than a dozen are well-known abroad, and those that are seem pre-ordained to such descriptions as zesty, earthy, lively, fruity,

Yet there are conspicuous exceptions, foremost among them a presumptuous Tuscan that has been earning the kind of highflown praise seldom heard outside the Haut-Médoc or the Côte de Nuits.

Bottles of Brupello di Montalcino Biondi-Santi 1888 are believed to be the oldest and most expensive on retail sale in the world. One was sold last year for $415 to a Roman client by Sergio Biagini, a Florentine who is among the few vintners with bottles left from that year. Older wines of other types exist in private collections, however, and hottles have been sold for more at auctions.

Wines from recent Biondi-Santi vintages are listed at from two to three times the price of the best Barolos; they sell for more in Rome than the leading Bordeaux and Burgundies of the same years sell for in Franco Biondi-Santi, who took over the family Greppo estate when his father died last year, would probably expect more than $415 for any of the ten bottles of 1888 that that have never been moved more than a few meters from a special vault in his cellar. He also has 49 hottles of 1891, 32 of 1925 and 257 of 1945 resting there. All are in excellent condition. They were recorked the spring of 1970, as they are every quarter century, sampled and attested to by a notary and a few special friends. One of the guests at the recorking ceremony was the Italian author and wine expert Mario Soldati, a man not usually inclined to exaggerate. He equated his tasting of the 1888 to "witnessing a small miracle," because the wine retained the full, round flavor and harmony of bouquet sensed in later vintages.

For those who like their Italian winemakers swarthy, barefoot and singing arias, Mr. Bloddi-Santi is an image-wrecker. Tall, fair-complexioned and blue-eyed, he has a university degree, skis, speaks softly and makes wine with the discipline of a Trap-

His estate is one of about 40 making Brupello around the medieval village of Montalcino in the geotle hills south of Siena. None of the others equals Biondi-Santi

"Their positions aren't so ideal as ours." he says charitably. But there is much more than that behind the success.

Franco's great-grandfather. Clemente Santi, won a citation for a wine called Brupello in 1865, but his grandfather. Ferrucio, is known locally as the founder of Brunello. The rule elsewhere in Tuscany is to hlend grapes, but Ferrucio Biondi-Santi found that the Brunello grape, which thrives in the soil around Montalcino, made an excellent wine all by itself. Brunello is a superior variety of Sangiovese, the mainstay of Chianti and most other reds of the region. Ferruccio and his son, Tancredi, set standards for their wines which must have seemed absurdly high to other growers. . Reserve wines were made only in exceptional years and then only from grapes grown on choice plots. They remained in barrels of special oak imported from Yugoslavia for at least five years before being bottled. Once bottled; they were sold to friends, wine lovers and certain vintners who knew bow to keep fine wines. In exceptional years, a quantity was set asida in the vault to be consumed or sold many years later. At Greppo, the tricks nature can play on wine cave been kept to an exemplary minimum.

One result of these limitations was obscurity. Biondi-Santi wines were unknown outside Tuscany until the 1950s, and the numper of bottles that left the country before 1960 would probably not fill a case.

Prices were always high, but the "boom," is Franco Biondi-Santi describes it, began about seven years ago in Italy. It is now preading abroad. Orders started arriving from Britain after the wine was served to Queen Elizabeth at a banquet offered in London in April, 1969, by Italian President Giuseppe Saragat. The first shipment of Biondi-Sapti wines to America is taking place this summer, to Corti Brothers, wine merchants in Sacramento. Calif.

"I don't want our business to grow too oig," Mr. Biondi-Santi says. "I am gradually increasing production, but only to the point where" I can keep complete control

There are two other qualities of Brunello Biondi-Santi besides riserra: etichetta nera (black label) and etichetta bianca (white label 1, also known as Greppo. They are also fine—and expensive—wines made, in vintage years, of grapes not designated reserve or, n nonvintage years, of the best grapes. Biondi-Santi, by bottling reserve Brunello only in good years, offers a form of guarantee-wine labeled riserva with the year and number on the neck of the bottle meets the estate's highest standards. The other two Brunellos will have either the black label denoting very good quality or the white lahel denoting good quality plus a label with the year but no bottle number.

Of the two most recent reserve vintages each of the 1967, 1968 and 1969 vintages.

Mr. Biopdi-Santi believes the rich and abundant 1970 crop will be the best of this century. If it develops as expected, he bopes to produce about 48,000 bottles of Brunello. including some 27.000 bottles of riserva. None of these wines will be available until five to seven years after the harvest, and, once bottled, they should be laid away for another ten years or more.

Beating out Beatle George Harrison, who came in second for his record "Something," was Cliff Richard, given top spot not for any particular song but for his "services to British music." Some of Richard's services were performed in peculiar places by pop standards. The bespectacled singer, a former best-selling rock-and-roller who is now considered one of Britain's top evangelists, sings these days as often from a pulpit or in religious-school classes as in recording studios or TV shows. Richard, who also has preached Rlongside Billy Graham, said yesterday, "It's popular these days to be a Buddhist or something Oriental but it's funnywhen you talk about Christ you often embarrass people." Wheth-
